If the snake is coiled with its head raised, this means the snake is in defense mode and could strike. So, get even further away. Be careful when looking for any golf balls hit out in the desert. When it is hot outside, snakes seek shade. Use caution when going for a ball in a shady area.

GOLF TIP: GREEN READING

Great putters have the ability to read greens well. Many golfers under read the break, leaving the ball below the hole with no chance to go in. Keys to consider include the speed of the green, surrounding terrain and slopes, and even playing partners' shots. As you approach the approach the green, look at which side of the green is higher. Are you putting uphill or downhill? It is important that a ball arrive at the beginning of a downhill tier with just the right speed. Also, your ball needs to arrive at the top of an uphill tier with enough speed to get the ball to the hole. If there is a pond or a body of water nearby, the ball will tend to break toward the water. Pick out a target along your line and commit yourself to aim at the target.
